This is the first Gauntlet game in a long time where there aren't any Dummys (the one-hit beats to the death) and the stone walls are of the 8-10 pound variety. This is an RPG for 8 year olds. They can get into the story, the side quests and the many dungeons. 5-10 minutes per dungeon Content Rating(s): Violence, Blood, Mild Language, Mature Cast: 9+Q: GLSL blur shader not showing on iPhone I'm trying to use a blur shader on an iPhone app I'm developing. I'm using GLSL, and it's not showing up. It's built using an Apple shaders file, which has the following: varying highp vec2 textureCoordinate; varying highp vec2 textureCoordinate2; uniform sampler2D inputImageTexture; uniform sampler2D inputImageTexture2; uniform highp float texelWidthOffset; // 2.0 / inputImageTexture2.getWidth(); uniform highp float texelHeightOffset; // 2.0 / inputImageTexture2.getHeight(); uniform highp float texelWidthOffset2; // 1.0 / inputImageTexture2.getWidth(); uniform highp float texelHeightOffset2; // 1.0 / inputImageTexture2.getHeight(); void main() { lowp vec4 color = vec4(0.0, 0.0, 0.0, 1.0); lowp vec2 texel = vec2(texelWidthOffset, texelHeightOffset); highp float inputImageTotal = inputImageTexture.width * inputImageTexture.height; highp float blurAmount = 3.0; // Grayscale image

Story

The Stone Age began with an explosion... All of the dinosaurs were obliterated by the mysterious forces of the Stone Age. The remaining men built shelters in the isolated places and gradually built up civilization. They became farmers, hunters and warriors. Our story begins in the Stone Age. Once upon a time there lived a boy, Anthony. As he grew up, he learned to use a stone tool. His father was also a hunter, and his mother was a farmer. The boy searched for ground breaker to help him hunt deer. But he failed to find the ground breaker. He and his friends then searched for coach to help them hunt deer. But they failed. He and his friends are then chased by a giant hunter. Anthony now knows that these are not the first. There will be more. The game starts with a single, temporary tile that must be turned to a red tile (or any other colour). As you clear the board, tiles will drop into the empty spaces, and the temporary tile will change to a different colour and become the permanent tile. Once you turn all the tiles to a single colour, you clear the board and you move onto the next level. The game ends once you turn the most tiles to the same colour, either by using a gold, time limit, or the wrong tile. Monsters are invading from the depths of the ocean. Track down the monsters, collect the pieces of the pixie's crown and help her regain her magic power. Catch fish, collect the needed ingredients to cook a pie and send the ice cream maker on his way. Help Alice and the others to defeat the evil Owl. Try to collect all kinds of gems and diamonds. Play this point and click puzzle game and become a real gem hunter. Aircar (a short form of air conditioner) is the common name for air-conditioning units used in a cooling device, especially those relating to motor racing. History The first air-cooled car, a big gyrocar called "Gyrocar, Pobeda", was designed by Anatoliy Basabzev, the famous car engineer of Beriev OKB, the famous Russian aircraft and airships manufacturer. He was inspired by the BKS small air-cooled airplane made by the Kalinin Aero Works in 1912. However, on the first flights with the gyrocar, Anatoliy Bazyev realised that: 'The short radius of the flight and a high wing area make it impossible to use onboard air-cooling'. He got a patent for the device in 1916 and worked on it as the development and chief engineer of Beriev OKB, designing several versions of air-cooled car prototypes and prototypes of a new type of aeroplane, the M-10, and some types of military aircraft. The resulting prototype car was raced at the Russian Open-air Championships and it was designed and built so that the bottom half was mounted on a wheeled frame with the axle arranged diagonally, and the upper half was mounted on a flywheel connected to an internal combustion engine mounted in the bottom of the engine compartment. The cars did not utilize the flexible positioning of the engine (the engine could be moved backwards and forwards) as was later done in the cars of other constructors, the main advantage of such a construction being that there was an increased protection of the engine against heat. However, it would have been possible to later switch to flexible engine placement (as did Skoda at their LD cars) if safety fears were not stopping them. The aerodynamic designer began construction of the cars in 1917, but by September 1918 only one car and engine were constructed, after obtaining a certificate from the state commission on navigational devices. The car then made its first flight in November 1918, and only one model of this car was made and was raced. A second model was being built in September 1919. The most "wild" and advanced form of aircooling car came from Vladimir Koshkin of KVN. His new Koshkin PD-50 was a low aspect ratio car with a rectangular body created by a pod-like fixed mould which was then thrown against a curved roof-like fibreglass cover. The
