Q: Delete part of mongodb records that contain null values Let's say I have a collection of documents, one of which is { _id: ObjectId("5340a23cbf2a0ad1ba9bc4f9"), a: 'test', b: null, c: null, d: 1, e: 'test' } I want to select only records where b is null, and delete them. How would I do that? A: You can use the

$exists operator like this: db.collection.update({ "_id": ObjectId("5340a23cbf2a0ad1b a9bc4f9") }, { "$set": { "b": null } }, { "multi": true }) You can read more about it in the official documentation. Equivalence test for in vivo and in vitro dissolution data by means of a decision criterion. A decision criterion is presented and applied to quantify the discrepancy between in vitro and in vivo dissolution data. This test is based on the statistical concept of one-sided confidence intervals for difference measures. It suggests that dose-response relationships are not present, if the size of the discrepancy between in vitro and in vivo data is significantly larger than the confidence limit. This test was applied to the following example: (a) to establish a relationship between peroral sucrose release and the particle size of a solid formulation; (b) to quantify differences between in vitro dissolution of conventional and new salt forms of sucrose; and (c) to quantify the effect of varying the rumen pH upon release from a forage supplement. The results showed that the significance level of the discrepancy between in vitro and in vivo data depends on the confidence limits chosen for the reference method. The significance level of the discrepancy thus depends not only on the results of the in vitro dissolution test but also on the nature of the reference test. To minimize the discrepancy between
