The new Move Engine in FIFA 22 is designed to intelligently evolve and improve the on-ball intelligence in each of the real-life players. An AI that takes into account the real-world limitations of humans, the Move Engine is in on-ball positioning and decision-making during the moments that matter. FIFA and EA Sports are committed to enhancing the experience of keeping up with the game. Players can use all of the interactive Touchpad components to help them during gameplay. Players are able to control the game almost as if they are right on the pitch, whether they are on defense or offense. They can move the ball forward and backwards using the offside channel, and with a flick of their right stick, they can shoot, set up a pass or control a specific player. They can kick the ball into the air and then control an on-screen player in the air. Possession is dynamic and players can defend the ball while waiting in a half-space. Players can pass into space and then off the ball, or dribble with the ball at their feet, play a pass, move through the defensive line or through a three-on-two. Teammates can be called up by pressing the left analog stick, or while selected, pressing L2 to open their teammate menu. Players can shoot, pass, dribble, run and chip with their AI teammates or opponents, and can throw their body in close proximity to the ball. Players can control the ball in mid-air and perform a front or back-heel based on where they catch the ball. Players can be controlled to pass, shoot, dribble or catch the ball based on their position, and the system will react to their position in the defensive and offensive zones. "There are a few ways that players can control the game when on-ball," says Patrick Smith, Executive Producer, PlayFootball. "Players can select an on-ball pass, shoot, dribble, set a pass or control specific players. We want to make sure the controls do not prevent the human player from having a solid control of their on-ball actions. For example, while making a throw in the air, the player should still have the ability to control their on-screen players. By combining those four key actions, we give the player as much control as possible to enable them to best execute their game strategy on the pitch." FIFA 22 introduces an unprecedented number of on
