FIFA is a video game series, originally published by Electronic Arts. The current version is FIFA 20. The series centers around the global game of association football, and the various modes of the game, including FIFA Ultimate Team (FUT). The series' popularity has been rising since the release of the first FIFA in 1991, and has since expanded to many different games (including mobile) and platforms (including Xbox One). It has also been released in many different regions over time, including Japan, the United Kingdom, Russia, Australia, New Zealand, Ukraine, France, Germany, Spain, Brazil, Italy, Mexico, South Africa, Latin America, and many more. The game currently features options for seven different playable teams (at least since FIFA 22) with a total of over 2700 player licenses. The majority of the player licenses are licensed from a single source, namely the Indian Football Association, who licenses around 800/900 player licenses each year. EA Sports FIFA tournaments The Electronic Arts FIFA series of games has a tournament structure. There is a FIFA World Cup and a FIFA Confederations Cup each year, as well as various EA-developed friendly tournaments. These tournaments are held every year in the FIFA calendar year, and consist of two stages. In the first stage, four teams from each region compete in knock-out or single elimination tournaments to qualify for the second stage, which includes a competition in a specific country. The winners of these tournaments go on to compete in the FIFA World Cup or FIFA Confederations Cup, in which they compete against teams from the other regions. FIFA World Cup The FIFA World Cup is held each year in June/July, in a different country. Each participant (except host countries) are split into groups of four and play in a single round-robin style tournament until the end. The winner of each group then goes on to compete in the knockout stage. In the knockout stage, each group winner then plays each other single-elimination style, with the loser being eliminated and the winner then going on to compete in a final tournament against the other two winners of the knockout stage. After each round is completed the three winners then play the FIFA Confederations Cup. This year, the competition will be won by France, who will become the 9th of 11 countries to have ever won the FIFA World Cup. France will be competing in the FIFA Confederations Cup as the winner of the group, which includes: bc9d6d6daa
