However, the menu bar can be a little buggy in IE8. Here's a screenshot of what it looks like in IE8 and chrome: The blue bar on the far right is supposed to expand if the menu is too long. In the code itself, I have the following CSS: #right:after { content: ""; background-color: red; position: absolute; bottom: 0; width: 100%; height: 3px; left: -4px; z-index: 0; transition: all.3s; } #right:hover:after { width: 100%; bottom: -30px; } The property overflow-x doesn't seem to be working in IE8, so the menu isn't expanding the way I thought it would. I've seen this question but none of the answers seem to address this problem. How can I get IE8 to allow a div to fill the remaining space? A: I found a solution. I added a new property that gets rid of the red padding in IE8: #right:after { content: ""; background-color: red; position: absolute; bottom: 0; width: 100%; height: 3px; left: -4px;

Any help with this issue would be greatly appreciated. A: After much fumbling around, the issue turned out to be the Windows Installer (WiX). I solved the problem by simply re-installing the Visual Studio Installer as the installer did successfully install the WiX tool. Dialysis patients' perspectives on the association between iron supplementation and dialysis dependence: a qualitative study. Anemia is very prevalent among hemodialysis patients and contributes to the morbidity and mortality of these patients. This study explored the association between iron supplementation and dialysis dependence from the patient's perspective. In-depth, semistructured, open-ended interviews were conducted with 17 hemodialysis patients in Ontario, Canada. Themes and subthemes regarding the association between iron supplementation and dialysis dependence were identified and examined with a constant comparative approach. Four themes, related to misconceptions and misconceptions, were identified: (a) perceptions of dialysis, (b) interpretation of laboratory results, (c) need for anemia treatment, and (d) wish to receive information. Some patients believe that oral iron supplementation has beneficial effects on dialysis-related complications and on overall health and well-being. Although some patients' focus on dialysis-related complications, majority of the patients have never received any information regarding the consequences of iron supplementation on their dialysis-related complications. Dialysis-related misconceptions among hemodialysis patients regarding the relationship between iron supplementation and dialysis dependence need to be addressed by the health care professionals.
