Intro: In Gravity you are a Service called Archæ a citizen called to give their Service to the System Alliance of Humanity. With rare ability comes an unusual responsibility. The panel you are standing on in the video is a nanotechnology based load bearing platform. Load bearing means that the planet will hold the weight of everything on it, including your weight. There is no danger of you toppling over or falling down. Gravity is made to be played without having to worry about falling and getting hurt. Platform: In the prototype stage of development. We are focusing on hardware debugging and testing to push out a game in Virtual Reality at a high framerate, for up to 4 players in 4G Smartphones and Tablets. No one plays a role of perfection, no one has complete control over their actions. But the laws of physics remain static and can be re-used, collected, and iterated upon. Gravity is interested in the difficult matter of relationships." A: The story is something of a confession - the protagonist of Gravity will be never be seen or heard from again. The only dialogue we are ever shown is the final question asked by the panacea to the protagonist: Go to your room The rest of the game is a prologue (the majority of the game is played in what seems to be in a very similar room to the one shown in the video) and the aftermath. As already noted by @Holstein, the game has been done before: Gravity (working title) is a story-focused, sci-fi, 3D, puzzle, platformer with non-traditional gravity and perspective. Gravity is designed to be played on the largest screen possible, using the Magic Leap platform. Really the only question is whether it will be usable - and that is one
