Toxicological and performance evaluation of a hybrid polar organic solvent/chlorinated solvent for use in the crop pesticide industry. A joint program was initiated to develop crop protection products containing a combination of hexane and/or heptane and/or isopropyl alcohol (IPA) and chlorinated solvents. The acute toxicological and performance effects of the test products were tested and results are presented herein. Acute oral LD50 values for the hybrids were compared to those of previously developed formulations of each organic solvent alone. The hybrid products were approximately one-half to one-third as toxic as the respective parent compound. The hybrids were evaluated for their effect on growth and development of the freshwater shrimp Macrobrachium olfersii. Results of a life table study indicate that larvae were able to tolerate concentrations of the respective organic solvents ranging from 1.6 to 7.2 ppm (0.02-0.13% of the medium mixture) for up to 21 d. $t_{1/2} = 2.1 \times 10^3 \text{ g} \cdot \text{m}^{-3}$. Let $x(1) = 1 \cdot 10^3 + 4$. Let $b(x) = 0$. Suppose $b(x) = -p$. What is the third derivative of $p \cdot f(x)^2 + f(x)^6 - 3 \cdot f(x)^2 + 3 \cdot f(x)^6$ wrt f ?

Effect of protein intake on the utilization of nitrogen in lactating dairy cows. Effects of various levels of dietary protein on utilization of nitrogen (N) and N retention were studied in lactating dairy cows. Six multiparous cows, weighing 533 kg, were fed a total mixed ration consisting of .87% N in N-free food (basal diet) plus 600 g of urea-mineralized soybean meal (meal diet) as the N supply and supplemental urea during the lactation period. The basal diet contained 1.60% crude protein (CP), and the meal diet.57% CP. The cows were allowed free access to the diets. The N and CP contents of feces and urine were determined. Intake of N and CP of the basal diet were 17.3 g/d and 14.3 g/d, respectively, and of the meal diet were 32.9 g/d and 9.1 g/d. Nitrogen retained was 5.8 g/d on the basal diet and 12.5 g/d on the meal diet. Apparent N digestibility and N retained were significantly higher in the meal diet than in the basal diet. Dry matter intake and milk yield were not affected by dietary treatments. The proportion of gross energy intake that was digested was higher with an increased intake of N, but not of CP. The apparent N efficiency of the N intake was significantly lower on the basal diet than on the meal diet. Although protein concentration of milk was not affected by dietary treatments, milk N concentration tended to increase with an increased intake of N. Apparent N balance and N retention on the basal diet were significantly lower than on the meal diet, indicating a lower N utilization in the basal diet. It is concluded that the level of dietary protein affects N metabolism in dairy cows, resulting in a lower efficiency of N utilization in the basal diet than in the meal diet.
