Come January at least one of the owners would decide that maybe they don't want to get screwed by the players anymore after all. 2. Or maybe the board will fire Bettman and Gary Bettman. Nope. Luckily for us, Gary Bettman ISN'T getting fired. That decision has been made for him. According to TSN, the NHL board of governors has decided to eliminate the commissioner's staff. It means that Bettman will have to work an extra hour a day and he'll no longer be allowed to work on Sundays. A slightly different version of this story reached Yahoo's front page. I can't seem to find anything from The Globe and Mail, but here are the details from the Toronto Sun: The players' association is going to be without three of its top negotiators as the lockout drags on. NHL GMs can handle the meetings, so Gary Bettman will continue to hold the reins on the negotiating table. Bettman, the NHL commissioner, will also have the power to make decisions if the labor talks drag into the final two days of the lockout. So basically the owners have given Gary Bettman the job of negotiating with the players. The players are kind of giving Gary Bettman the job of negotiating with the owners. It's still not much, and it's certainly not going to save Gary Bettman's career if the lockout lasts more than an additional few days, but it's a bit of a victory for Gary Bettman. This makes total sense, considering the NHL has made billions over the years and the players have made the league what it is today. If the players are unwilling to take a haircut this offseason, the NHL owners are going to have to admit that they might have to give the union what it wants. If this lockout comes to an end in January, the NHL would be left with no choice but to scrap the cap, which is the most important part of the agreement.

Q: In ColdFusion, is there anyway to run JavaScript code when the page is loaded? I have some JavaScript code that needs to run on page load. Is there anyway to do this in ColdFusion? Or do I have to use AJAX? A: In ColdFusion there is a convention that tells you how to access the onload function. See here. You would hook into one of the onload methods like this: onload = function() { // Your JavaScript code here }; You can also use onload="" by itself. In cases where you want to run code in ColdFusion it is usually better to use ColdFusion's onRequestStart event, like this: onRequestStart = function() { // Your JavaScript code here }; You can also use onRequestStart="" by itself. Q: Drawing a Brush Circle I have a selection circle that I can fill with various colors. If I select two areas of color, it can tell me which areas were intersected. Now I want to draw a circle over the intersection, so that it can be marked. My problem is that I'm trying to figure out how to draw the brush circle. I have tried filling the selection circle with a white brush, but this isn't working for some reason. If anyone can either point me in the right direction, or help me understand my problem, I'd appreciate it. Thanks in advance. A: How to set and use a brush: A really good explanation of D3 brushes.
