Restructuring on the Nocturnal Sleep/Wake Cycle: Sleep-Inducing Effects of Melatonin. The effects of chronotherapy are known to vary as a function of wake time. However, little is known regarding the nocturnal sleep cycle of sleep-induced sleep loss with chronotherapy. The present study was designed to investigate the effects of chronotherapy (chronodiet) on the nocturnal sleep/wake cycle, with particular attention paid to the effects of melatonin. A total of 13 healthy males participated in the study. Participants were administered 4% carbohydrate solution for 7 consecutive days to induce sleep loss and maintain sleep disturbance.

They were then randomized to four treatments in a double-blind, crossover design. Treatment A consisted of a normocaloric diet with 21:00 hours as the regular sleep time for 7 days. Treatment B consisted of the same diet with 23:00 hours as the regular sleep time for 7 days.

Treatments C and D were the reverse of A and B, respectively. The pharmacological dose of melatonin (6 mg) was given to a subset of four participants (two from each treatment) at 23:00. Sleep and awakening times and sleep efficiency of each participant were measured by polysomnography. Compared with a fasting condition, nocturnal total sleep time was prolonged after a normocaloric diet and treatment with melatonin (treatment A vs. B, $p=0.02$; A vs. D, $p=0.02$; B vs. D, $p=0.02$). Treatment with melatonin also resulted in a phase advance of sleep (treatment A vs. B, $p=0.02$; A vs. D, $p=0.02$; B vs. D, $p=0.02$). Furthermore, treatment with melatonin promoted more sleep after the normocaloric diet. On the other hand, treatment with melatonin abolished the sleep loss induced by the normocaloric diet. These results indicate that chronodiet with melatonin improves nocturnal sleep in people with sleep loss and that this improvement 6d1f23a050
