Alexander Sadiku 5th ed.: Fundamentals of electrical circuits Chapter 4: . 4 Fundamentals of electrical circuits. .4.1 Signaling. Signaling is the transmission of messages from one source to another using electromagnetic radiation. Antennas are used to transmit messages. When an electromagnetic signal passes through a medium (air, water, Earth), part of the energy is lost, since there is a partial absorption (dielectric) and scattering (air) of electromagnetic energy or its complete dispersion (soil, water).

FREE In these days of countless options and lack of knowledge about how to do it properly, everything from the home project, the job you're the boss of, the repair, the electrician, the hardware store could use a little help. Men have collected information for centuries but now interactive information is on the move.

Now it's at your fingertips with eBooks, websites, and interactive magazines. They're a dream for the clueless and the handyman, visual and hands-on, and they can help. Who doesn't want to know how. Every home has electrical circuits and every home has a wiring system but not all wiring systems in all homes are a loose system that is tied together in a tight or watertight system with cable tie cable splices. Under electrical code, the wiring system in your home is classified as a loose or watertight
