Most tutors charge like $80/hour (though can vary). This is not the same people as you would see at Kaplan. They charge more than the tutors because they are expected to come into person. In my experience with Kaplan, we would ask for a "virtual tutoring session" where the student would come into the classroom and ask the questions we would use and then the teacher would type it up and email it. This was much more efficient than having to travel to the schools etc. Its similar to the tutors I know at AAMC. Most tutors at AAMC charge like $20/hour and some are free for students in that price range. About 2 hours a day is close to the normal amount a student might need. Kaplan has a right to make money. If you have lost a job, I am sure you wouldn't complain if someone was making money off you. Why should Kaplan be any different? They're not taking any risk. They're not quitting their jobs to do what they are doing. They have no incentive to do it, nor would they know how to even if they were given the opportunity. They are trying to sell a product to make money. That's not fair. However, I do feel bad for you because of the amount of debt you have. If I had to live with that amount of debt, I wouldn't be content either. I never worked at Kaplan, but that sounds like a lot of wealth and riches. I cant imagine why they wouldnt have the resources to help their employees. They should be hiring more people, not less. Also, the article states it is a profitable company, yet there are only two CEOs. I really don't think its an issue of morals so much as simple economics. Kaplan is one of the highest priced companies of any kind out there, but its hard for them to compete with schools, and students in terms of the affordability of their products. So they have to cut their prices to find a way to get by. My step 1 teacher bought her own copies of some of her classes. The ones that she didnt, she watched as many times as she could. You do what you have to.

To the people who seem to think that the PIRATE costs a huge amount of money, they are just wrong. In my case, the cost was only about 20 dollars a month, and thats for the high quality, full version of the course package. This is a steal compared to the amount of money I was spending to go to a top 5 university in the country. I spent a couple hundred dollars a year just to commute, plus the tuition. Kaplan was NOT a huge cost for me. Did it help? Yes it did. Did I learn a lot of stuff? Of course I did. Kaplans course literally saved my life, and I plan on paying it forward, teaching my younger brother how to be the entrepreneur he was meant to be. Kaplan is a for-profit company. While I completely understand people who are against capitalism, in this case, Kaplan is definitely not hurting anybody. If anything, it is the students who are hurting since they are being duped into paying more for less. Maybe Kaplan could be less greedy. With the millions of dollars they make from people like me, they could actually be able to afford the space to set up a testing center, instead of selling the prep materials off of thin air. Also, the test prep course prices should be raised, since unlike the article said, they do actually add up. Instead of the 2000+ they make, they should just give the course for free. I actually took Kaplan Step 1 in 2004 and 2005. It was a very valuable experience for me. I enjoyed the course a lot and appreciated the opportunity to learn more about medicine. The online course is worth it. I agree.

As long as people use Kaplan for academic purposes and not for some other wronful purpose like for your study life, I say welcome to the club. This is supposed to be about providing the best value for your money. If you're going to use Kaplan as a test prep then spend the time to study the material and go out and buy a good book from a small publisher. Or go to a community college and pay about $20 for a book and then spend the time on Kaplan. If you want to know what to study before you sit for any exam, then buy the cetrain test prep book. Realize that any Kaplan book can be sourced to the the one and same edition of the test that you are preparing for. Look up the publishers website and see if they sell the entire test book on line. If they have other options, I'd recommend to buy from the publisher to save money and time. 5ec8ef588b
